Editor Times: Feeling assured that you are always on the alert to promote the best interests of our city, and taking for granted that you wish her hall team to be successful on the diamond, I wish to ask you if you do not think Mr. Small's reward of 30 is unintentionally doing more harm than good. The batters, in trying to put the ball over the fence, knock up little easy files, which are "gobbled up" by the visiting fielders. I think that accounts for McGann's weak batting of late. If you are of the same mind as I am you might susgest some other means of encouraging the team, which Mr. Small might adopt, while my opinion would, perhaps, not weigh with him at all, as I am only

GORMAN BURNED IT UP.

One of Cleveland's Earliest Campaign

Documents.

When Senator Gorman, of Maryland, arose in the United States Senate yesterwhen Senator Gorman, or Maryana, arose in the United States Senate yesterday, and told of his experiences with President Cleveland on the compromise tariff bill there were Democrats who recalled the first meeting of the two men. It was ten years ago, almost to a day, Governor Cleveland had just been nominated by the Democratic Convention at Chicago. Senator Gorman had been made chairman of the National Democratic Committee. He had never seen Mr. Cleveland. The Maryland statesman had met all of the great Democratic leaders in the nation. He was the personal friend of Paniel Manning, who probably more than any single man in New York State brought about the nomination of Mr. Cleveland at Chicago. Governor Cleveland had been formally notified of his momination, and the headquarters of the National Democratic Committee had been opened in New York city. The story that is now told of the first meeting between Governor Cleveland and Chairman Gorman was told to a Sun reporter by Mr. Manning in the Western National Bank almost immediately after Mr. Manning retired from Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet as Secretary of the Treasury.

"To do not think I shall ever forget the first meeting of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Gorman," said Mr. Manning "We all had faith in Cleveland's running abilities, but it was necessary to bring Mr. Gorman and Mr. Cleveland together, and I undertook the task. I was then in Albany, but in constant communication with Mr. Gorman. Gorman, as you know, is a cool, snave Individual, and Cleveland in New York that I wrote to the ways of national statesmen, and it was with diffidence one night lust after the national headquarters had been opened in New York that I wrote to Gorman and invited him that I wanted to introduce to him to Governor Cleveland, the candidate of the party. Well, Gorman came up to Albany two or three nights afterward, and I took him around to see Cleveland. Cleveland was buff and hearty, and Gorman was as cordial as his cool nature would allow. They began to talk as to the plan of campaign. Gorma day, and told of his experiences with of the National Committee.

"'All right; says Cleveland, and he handed out the document, saying: What do you think of that, Gorman?

"Gorman read the document over very carefully, and then, without a word, he flung it into the grate, saying: That's what I think of that document.

"It was a little chilly in Albany that night, and there was a fire in the grate, and the document began to burn. Cleveland jumped out of his chair and hopped up and down in his anger, shouting: 'No man alive can burn any document of mine. What do you mean, sir?"

"Why, Governor, said Gorman, as coolly as you please, 'you said that I was to run this campaign according to my own discretion. The document that I have just thrown into the fire is about as unwise a manuscript as ever came under my notice."

"Cleveland meantime was tramping about in his rage, but Gorman was as cool as an lecherg. Finally Cleveland began to laugh at himself. He remembered his remarks to Gorman on the first interview, and the two men parted friends, but not until Cleveland had told Gorman that he was the coolest son of a gun he had ever met."

If Senator Gorman could have got hold of the letter Mr. Cleveland sent to Professor Wilson he might have found a fire somewhere in Washington, even in July.—New York Sun of yesterday.

The Bitter Feeling in the Senate Over This Struggle over Tariff.

This is the way the Washington correspondent of the New York World decribes the effect and purpose of Mr. nn's speech: feeling is that Mr. Gorman's speech

Gorman's speech:
The feeling is that Mr. Gorman's speech reflects his own conviction and that of his associates that they must detend themselves for their action, and that defence is the natural preliminary to surrender. They assume the attitude of last ditchers, and men do not usually resume that attitude until they are actually in their last ditch.
Their antagorism, as reflected by Senator Gorman's speech, is directed mainly against the President and the Secretary of the Treasure.

I asked one distinguished tariff reform senator this morning to introduce me to a conservative senator who stood within six feet of us at the moment. He protested his willingnees and easerness to introduce me to any person with whom he was on terms, but remarked: "With that person I am not on terms, and to him I can introduce no friend whom I respect." I mention this incident as showing more perfectly than any mere statement can how intensely feeling has been wrought up in this matter and how large a part personal feeling seems destined to play in its settlement.
